THE COVID
YIZKOR BOOK

To read the story behind the largest list of Jewish victims of the pandemic, visit Chabad.org/4846602 after Yom Kippur.

After Yom Kippur, visit Chabad.org/EachPersonAWorld to read full tributes and to view this project online.

This is by no means a complete list of all those whom our people lost to the pandemic. Please help us remember all those lost by sharing their information and life with us at Chabad.org/4720211.

We hope you found The Covid Yizkor Book meaningful. Please share your feedback, suggestions and corrections with us at feedback@chabad.org.

HONORING 1,800 JEWS LOST TO COVID-19—TOGETHER

In Jewish tradition, an individual's death is the entire community's loss and so is communally mourned. The Chevra Kadisha burial society prepares the deceased; the Kaddish prayer is recited with a quorum; shiva brings together family, friends and neighbors. Covid made so much of this difficult, and at times even impossible.

Yet the loss remains the same. Every soul, the Torah teaches, is an entire world. It is the duty of the living to remember the deceased and all the good they did. Memories must be recorded, obituaries written, and headstones erected. Most importantly, we must take to heart lessons from the way those now gone led their lives during the time allotted to them by G-d.

In response to a family requesting guidance on the language for their deceased father's gravestone, the Rebbe—Rabbi Menachem M. Schneerson, of righteous memory—wrote that while important, above all, they must remember that the monument and the words inscribed are but of stone. For “the offspring of the departed are a living monument. Their deeds and behavior in their everyday lives ... act as a living inscription on a living monument; the wording of this inscription is in their hands, and only theirs.”

With the spread of coronavirus to Israel and the West in early March 2020, the global pandemic began taking a heavy toll on the Jewish community. Realizing that we were on the precipice of traumatic historical events, Chabad.org assembled a team of researchers, writers and editors to find as many names of Jews lost to the virus, in order to go beyond the statistics and remember each by their names. Chabad.org has also published hundreds of obituaries and biographical sketches of some of the people on the list (Chabad.org/EachPersonAWorld).

Honoring the memories of Jews from around the world who were lost to the pandemic highlights Jewish unity, especially in the face of challenges. The total names on this list—1,800—is a fraction of the Jewish lives lost to the pandemic, and serves to represent those whose stories have yet to be told. The Chabad.org COVID-19 team has used dozens of sources from multiple countries and languages in trying to find as many of these names as possible. While it was difficult work, it is an ongoing labor of love in bringing a sense of dignity and healing to the deceased's families and highlighting the unity of the Jewish people.

May the memory of those who have passed be a blessing for the Jewish people and all humankind, and their stories a living legacy for all.
