Overview

n parashat Teitzei, Moses continues his review of the legal portions of the previous three books of the Torah, adding new material that will only become relevant once the Jewish people begin the conquest of the Land of Israel and settle it.

As we have noted previously, God commanded our ancestors to conquer the Land of Israel from its pagan inhabitants in order that the Jewish nation could have a land that it could make into a home for Him. Ultimately, of course, God's intention is for the whole world to become His home; this is the essence of our sages' statement that "in the messianic future, the Land of Israel will expand to encompass the entire world." The first stage in this process was for the Jewish people to demonstrate to the nations of the world that this goal is achievable; this necessitated us having our own sovereign state in which we could pursue this goal unhindered. In this land, special laws would apply and unique commandments would be observed that would not apply or be observed anywhere else in the world.

Thus, the Land of Israel vis-à-vis the rest of the world would be the geographic equivalent of the Jewish people vis-à-vis the rest of humanity. God had set the Jewish people apart from the rest of humanity as "a kingdom of priests and a holy nation." The priestly caste is required to observe special laws and fulfill special duties that set it apart from the rest of the Jewish people in order for it to serve as an idealization of the intense relationship with God to which every Jew should aspire in his or her daily life. Similarly, the Jewish people as a whole are to serve as an idealization and inspiration for humanity at large. Analogously, God set the Land of Israel apart from the rest of the world—by virtue of its special status in Jewish law and observance—in order that it serve as the example of what the rest of the world should aspire to become.

This, however, is only the first stage in the process of transforming the world into God's home. The beginning of this parashah addresses the second stage in this process, assuming that the obligatory wars of conquest have already been fought and won and that the Holy Land has come entirely under Jewish jurisdiction. The next, second phase in the process is for the Jewish people to undertake voluntarily to expand the borders of their state, thereby increasing the territory in which the special laws of the Land of Israel apply. In this way, they gradually increase the proportion of the world that exemplifies the ideal of being a true home for God.

OVERVIEW OF TEITZEI

Now, as we know, the rationalization for displacing the Canaanite nations is that they themselves were foreigners who had wrested the land from its original inhabitants, the offspring of Shem, from whom the Jewish people descended.² By reoccupying the land, the Jewish people were merely restoring it to its rightful and intended owners, in that the Land of Israel was created to be the holy land lived in by the holy people. However, there can be no such rationalization for conquering land outside the borders of the Land of Israel. It is clear from the Book of Genesis that the various geographical divisions of the world were assigned to the nations suited to inhabit and develop them, each according to its unique cultural disposition. By what right, then, can the Jewish people appropriate territory apparently not intended for them?

Furthermore, waging war is dangerous, and the Torah forbids us to endanger ourselves unnecessarily.³ When the Torah specifically directs us to wage war, as when conquering the Promised Land or in self-defense, it is clear that this directive overrides the prohibition against endangering our lives. But an optional war is not such a case; how, then is it permitted to undertake such a war?

As it happens, these two questions are actually each other's answers. The very fact that waging war against another nation is a dangerous affair indicates that that nation has not recognized that its true fulfillment lies in its submission to the Divinely-inspired guidance of God's representatives on earth, the Jewish people. It has therefore defined itself as an enemy of holiness. Let us recall that voluntary wars are to be initiated only after the obligatory wars (and their corresponding inner, spiritual wars) have all been fought and won—that is, after the Jewish people have successfully inherited the land and transformed it into a utopian model of holy living. If a neighboring nation, witnessing this model of what a Divine home on earth could be, chooses not to participate in this vision (by accepting the Torah's rules of life for non-Jews), it has forfeited its right to steward its own land and citizenry.

The reason the Torah does not explicitly command us to conquer such a country, leaving the initiative to our discretion, is because only in this way can it be truly demonstrated that we fully identify with the Divine imperative. If we have internalized God's perspective on life to the extent that we are willing to risk our lives to promulgate Divine consciousness even when not specifically commanded to do so, this readiness is itself our mandate to do so.

As we know, the spiritual analogue of conquering the Land of Israel is conquering the diverse forms of evil embodied by its earthly inhabitants. This struggle is obligatory and, if carried out successfully, it will effect the changes in our personalities necessary for us to achieve and sustain ongoing Divine consciousness. The means used to wage this war against evil is the commandments of the Torah, both the prohibitive and the active.

However, once this goal has been achieved, we have two avenues of further spiritual endeavor open to us: focusing on our own spiritual growth, ascending into more intense and enhanced states of Divine knowledge, and focusing on spreading Divine knowledge outward, encompassing more aspects of our lives and the lives of those around us.

We might be tempted to shy away from the latter option, thinking that any foray into aspects of life not explicitly mandated by the Torah is a dangerous proposition, or that we perhaps have no right to impose Divine awareness on a world happy to do without it. If we have truly internalized the Divine imperative, however, we will fear neither facing spiritual dangers nor asserting our own mission.

In other words, obligatory wars against evil are waged on the first level of consciousness, where there is a difference between the Land of Israel and the world at large, i.e., between those parts of reality that the Torah has specifically and explicitly commanded us to take over and those that it has not. In contrast, voluntary wars against evil are waged on the second, messianic level of consciousness, in which there is potentially no difference between the Land of Israel and the rest of the world, in which "the Land of Israel expands to encompass the entire world." At this level of consciousness, awareness of God must spread to encompass all of reality, and we, ourselves filled with Divine consciousness, can reveal the Divinity within all facets of reality without fear of being affected detrimentally by engaging them.⁴

to use a creative power that originates in a higher order of Divinity than that which He used to create the rest of creation. Thus, when we conquer these enemies, we liberate the transcendent Divine energy with which God created them, enabling us to harness this energy in the service of holiness. Thus, our Divine mission is greatly advanced by this process. ¹⁰

The enemy's captives: As just mentioned, this verse refers to overcoming the evil inclination. Among the captives we can rescue from the evil inclination are the lessons we can learn from it.

The first such lesson we can learn is that of perseverance. The evil inclination was created by God to attempt to seduce us into actions contrary to the purpose of our creation; it performs this task with the utmost dedication and tenacity. We should be similarly dedicated and tenacious in fulfilling the purpose of our creation: to reveal Godliness in the world through learning God's Torah and performing His commandments.

In fact, from observing the single-minded drive of the evil inclination, we can deduce just how strong and dedicated our own positive inclination—which must be as strong as the evil inclination in order for us to have free choice—really is.¹¹

To illustrate: The story is told of a famous sage who resolved to rise very early every morning, subtracting from his sleep a few more minutes every few months. Once, he recalled, upon waking, his evil inclination implored him to return to sleep. "You are an old man. You need your sleep. Why wake up so early?" To this the sage replied, "You are older than I am (i.e., you were created at the beginning of time) and you're awake!"

10-11 If you go out to war: The Maggid of Mezeritch explains that allegorically, this passage refers to a temporary loss of Divine consciousness and how we can restore it:

If you go out: When you leave your state of oneness with God—

To war: you will assuredly have to contend with your evil inclination and the enticements of the physical world.

If you see among the captives: The "captives" are all aspects of the materiality of this world, in which there are captive sparks of Divinity.

A beautiful woman: If you find yourself beckoned by the external beauty of physical reality, its sensuality, and the pleasure it promises—

And you take her: you must not succumb to this aspect of what you see, but rather you should take it— As a wife: The word for "wife" in Hebrew (ishah) can also be vocalized to mean "fire offering" (isheh). You should elevate the Divine sparks in the materiality you confront to their Divine source. Rather than allowing the experience of this world to drag you further away from God, consecrate it to God's service and use it to enhance your relationship with Him.¹²

11 If you see a beautiful woman: As we have said, the captive woman—being one of the enemy's captives—allegorically signifies the aspect of our consciousness that had been trapped in worldly materiality. Redeeming this "captive" occurs on two levels: the intellect and the emotions. Both the intellect and the emotions must be cleansed of their material orientation in order to be restored to full Divine consciousness. These processes are alluded to in the next verses, as follows:

She must shave her head: The excess hair that we must shave off the head allegorically signifies the residual life-force of the intellect, the unnecessary intellectual indulgences in the culture of decadence and vanity.

Captives of War

21:10 Moses continued, "If¹ you go out of the land to wage an optional war against your enemies, and God, your God, delivers your enemy into your hands, and, along with the captives and spoils of war,² you take the enemy's own captives, among which are members of the seven Canaanite nations, whom you would be commanded to kill had you found them in the Land of Israel,³ you may, in this case, allow them to live.⁴

11 If you see a woman with beautiful facial features—even a married one—among the captives, and you desire her, and you want to take her for yourself as a wife, you may do so, but only after first doing the following:

EXECUTE SERVICE OF THE SERVICE OF

10 If you go out to war: The phraseology ordinarily used to express this idea is "If you go to war." The unusual "go out to war" indicates that engaging in war is unnatural for our Divine soul. Our soul's native environment is the peaceful, infinite Divine consciousness it experienced before it entered the body, when it was only conscious of itself as part of God's essence. There is no war with evil at this level of existence, since evil is powerless before such overpowering God-consciousness.

The literal meaning of the next phrase, "against your enemies," is "above your enemies." This is also an unusual idiom, which, like the first phrase, alludes to the origin of the Divine soul in God's essence. Since we originate in God's essence, to which evil can of course pose no threat, we a priori have the upper hand over evil, our archenemy. Furthermore, evil was only created in order for us to vanquish it. For both these reasons, the Torah assures us that "God will deliver your enemy into your hands."

The phrase "the enemy's captives," refers to the elements of reality—both of the physical world and of humanity's consciousness—that have fallen into the hands of evil, i.e., the mundane or anti-Divine worldliness that pervades reality.⁵

An optional war: The primary spiritual war that we are all required to fight is the battle to rid ourselves of whatever evil resides within us. True, part of our Divine mission is to vanquish evil in the world at large, but our ability to succeed in this struggle is directly proportional to how successful we have been in subjugating and eliminating our own personal evil. The theatre of our inner spiritual battle with evil is daily prayer, in which we strive to empower our Divine souls over our human-animal souls. The Zohar does not mince words in this regard: "The time of prayer is a time of battle."

This being the case, what is the spiritual correlate to the "optional" war? Are we not obligated to confront every instance of evil we perceive within ourselves?

The answer is yes, but there is another way to eliminate evil besides the direct confrontation characteristic of prayer: Torah study. Studying the Torah fills our consciousness with Divine awareness, and this awareness can largely dissipate the evil within us. Whereas the direct confrontation in prayer requires strenuous effort, the effect of Torah study is virtually automatic, for "its ways are ways of pleasantness and all its paths are peace."

Thus, whenever there is an option to do away with evil peacefully, through Torah study, taking the alternate route—that of direct engagement in prayer—becomes an "optional" war. Eliminating evil through Torah study obviates the need to battle evil in prayer, transmuting prayer into a simple, serene expansion of Divine consciousness.⁸

Your enemies: As we have discussed, 9 only God's existence is intrinsic; the rest of creation's existence is contingent on His existence. It therefore seems illogical that anyone or anything could be an enemy of Divinity. How could anyone oppose the source of their own existence?

The answer to this is that God created the world in such a way that its dependence upon Him is not only hidden but appears to be contradicted by empirical evidence. God Himself is therefore responsible for the fact that there are elements of this world that deny or oppose Him, as well as people in it who do the same.

As we know, the reason God did this is so that we could win these enemies of holiness over to the side of holiness, thereby demonstrating that even this darkness can be made into His home.

As we further know, God embedded a sense of logic and order into reality when He created the world. The fact that the existence of His enemies defies logic indicates that in order to create them, He had renewal to which we aspire in the month of Elul can occur only if we intensify our desire to attain Divine consciousness accordingly. To this end, our Divine soul must "weep for her father and mother," i.e., yearn for the Divine awareness it knew before it was "taken captive" in this physical world.¹⁸

≈ A CLOSER LOOK ❖

[11-14] A captive woman: A soldier is only allowed to take one captive woman as a potential wife. According to the Oral Tradition, the month-long period of waiting is required only if the woman does not consent to convert immediately. If, after the first month, she is still unwilling to convert, she is given eleven more months to deliberate, after which she must renounce idolatry, which then allows her to live in the land as a resident alien;¹⁹ otherwise she becomes liable to the death penalty, just as any non-Jew who transgresses the Noahide laws. In any case, the soldier is not allowed to marry her until three months have elapsed since her capture, in order to ascertain that she is not already pregnant by someone else.²⁰

№ INNER DIMENSIONS ◆

[13] She must weep for her father and her mother: The soul's "parents" are its innate Divine consciousness. The "father" alludes to the consciousness of Abba ("father"), i.e., chochmah, the soul's experience of selflessness in the presence of its radical awareness of God. The "mother" alludes to the consciousness of Ima ("mother"), i.e., binah, the soul's experience of God's intellect.²¹

- 12 Firstly, you must bring her into your home, and she must shave her head and let her nails grow long, in order that she look repulsive.
- 13 Secondly, although her people probably had her dress seductively in order to lure you and your fellow soldiers into pursuing her instead of concentrating on the battle, she must remove the seductive garment she is wearing in her captivity from upon herself and instead don ordinary clothing. Thirdly, she must remain in your house—as opposed to in the separate quarters provided for women¹³—such that you confront her constantly, ad nauseam, and fourthly, she must be allowed to weep freely for her father and her mother for a full month. All these measures are intended to make her seem repulsive to you, so as to discourage you from marrying her, and to make your Jewish wife seem attractive in comparison.

After doing all that, if you still desire the captured woman and she agrees to convert, ¹⁴ you may go to her and have marital relations with her, and she will thereby become a wife for you.

Even though such a marriage is permitted, it is only a concession to the soldier's base drives, which would compel him to marry the captive woman in any event. Nonetheless, be forewarned that since this union is not auspicious, the soldier will eventually despise this wife, and that furthermore, the children born from this union will be a source of grief.¹⁵

14 When, as predicted, you eventually do not desire her any longer and want to be rid of her, you must divorce her and send her away to live on her own. You may not sell her for money as a slave, nor may you keep her for yourself as a servant instead of as a wife, since you have afflicted her by not keeping her as your wife; therefore, you must treat her considerately.

And let her nails grow (lit., "and do her nails"): Although Rashi understands the expression "do her nails" to mean "let her nails grow"—this being a way of uglifying her, similar to how shaving her head uglifies her—the Talmud also records an opposing interpretation, according to which "do her nails" means "cut her nails"—just as the preceding action (shaving the head) is an act of cutting. ¹⁶ According to this understanding, just as shaving the head signifies eliminating excess intellectual indulgences in materialistic culture, trimming the fingernails signifies eliminating superfluous emotional indulgences in the same—since action, represented by the hands, is the expression of the emotions.

She must remove the garment of her captivity: The soul's "garments" are its powers of expression—thought, speech, and action. Once we have trimmed ourselves of excess intellectual and emotional indulgences in materialistic culture, we must then divest ourselves of the habits of thinking, talking, and acting engendered by immersion in that culture.

She must weep for her father and her mother for a full month: This refers to the month of Elul, ¹⁷ during which we prepare to renew our relationship with God on the High Holy Days. In this context, the renunciation of excess materialism in our lives alluded to by shaving the head and cutting the nails is sufficient for the rest of the year, but the self-

≈ A CLOSER LOOK ❖

[18] If a man has a son: Besides those mentioned in the text, there are many other conditions that must be met in order for this procedure to be applied, among which are the following:

- The son must steal the money (that he uses to buy the food and wine) from his father.
- He must buy inexpensive food and wine.
- He must consume the food and wine outside his parents' domain, and specifically in the company of societal outcasts.
- He must eat the meat only partially cooked, as it is typically eaten by thieves—who, living in constant fear of being pursued, cannot take the time to cook their food fully.
- He must drink the wine partially diluted, as it is typically drunk by drunkards—who try to stretch the wine while retaining its strength as much as possible.

- He must consume the required quantities of meat and wine in one swallow each.
- He must not consume the meat and wine in the course of fulfilling any commandment nor in the course of transgressing any other prohibition.
- The majority of the meat he eats must be meat of mammals, rather than of fowl.
- The meat and wine he consumes must be of a type that can be consumed regularly, thus excluding, for example, salty meat or unaged wine.
- Three months have not passed since he began puberty.²⁸

The question then, is: If the conditions prerequisite to applying this procedure are so restrictive as to make it almost impossible to occur, why does the Torah bother to describe it altogether? The answer is that, indeed, some of the 16 despite this, on the day that he, i.e., the husband, bequeaths his estate to his sons, he will not be able—i.e., allowed—to give the son of the beloved wife birthright precedence over the son of the despised wife, i.e., a double portion of his inheritance—for²² God has explicitly decreed that the firstborn son receive a double portion of his father's inheritance.

17 Rather, the father must acknowledge the primogeniture of the firstborn—even if the firstborn happens to be the son of the despised wife—by giving him a double share of all that he possesses, equal to twice the share that each of the other sons receives. The firstborn only receives a double share of his father's realized estate on the date of the latter's death, and not of any assets due to accrue to the father's estate later. The firstborn is granted the double share because he is the first product of his father's seminal strength; the birthright entitlement is therefore his.

The Wayward Son

18 You must not eat or drink gluttonously, in order that you not become subject to the following procedure:²³

If a man has a son who is at least thirteen years old and who is also in the initial stages of puberty,²⁴ and that son is wayward and rebellious—in that he has been witnessed stealing money, with which he then bought and consumed at least half a maneh [200 g or 7 oz.] of meat and half a log [172 ml or 5.8 oz.] of wine, thereby not obeying his father or his mother who have told him not to do this—his parents may chasten him by bringing him before a local court comprising three judges who, based on the testimony of the witnesses, will whip him. If he does not heed his parents again, and, after being warned a second time, is witnessed doing the same thing, then it is clear that he has internalized this disobedient behavior and will inevitably fall into a downward spiral of degeneracy, eventually becoming a lethal menace to society. This being the case, it is better that his life be ended before he has incurred this guilt. Therefore,

- 19 his father and his mother must seize him and bring him out to the elders of his city and to the gate of his place, i.e., to the district court of 23 judges.²⁵
- 20 They must say to the elders of his city, 'This son of ours is wayward and rebellious. He does not obey us: he is a persistent thief, glutton, and guzzler.'
- 21 If the court determines that the boy is still in the initial stages of puberty and then convicts him on the testimony of the witnesses, the latter must attempt to execute him as described above, ²⁶ and as above, if they fail, all the men of his city must pelt him to death with stones until he dies. So must you eliminate this evil from your midst. The court must announce the crime for which this boy is being executed so all Israel will hear about what happened and be afraid to incur similar guilt.

The procedures for designating, convicting, or executing someone as a wayward and rebellious son are not applied to a daughter.²⁷

In order to emphasize the fact were such a wayward son not to be executed, he would indeed eventually degenerate into more destructive behavior, for which he would incur the death penalty, I will now teach you some additional details of the laws of execution:

decree whereas the Talmud ascribes the death of the individuals it lists to the snake's venom.

The difference between the Talmud's statement and the Arizal's is one of degree. The Talmud implies that the individuals it mentions, though sinless, could not shake the self-orientation that had been injected into humanity by the primordial snake. He Arizal implied that the Ramak was clean even of this blemish. The Ramak could attain this level of purity only because he was devoted to the study and dissemination of the inner dimension of the Torah, which reveals the inner dimension of the Divine soul. This dimension of the soul is always pure and cannot be defiled by sin; when it is revealed, it overcomes even the self-orientation we inherit from the primordial snake. The fact that the Ramak did die nonetheless can therefore be attributed only to the fact that God decreed that all people should die. The lesson for us here is clear: By studying and spreading the inner dimension of the Torah, we can reveal the inner dimension of our own souls and those of others. This in turn neutralizes the effect of sin, therefore neutralizing the result of sin: exile and death. We hasten the messianic Redemption and the subsequent Resurrection of the Dead.³⁷

1-3 You must not see your brother's ox or sheep straying and ignore them: Allegorically, the missing ox or sheep alludes to elements that are lacking from a fellow Jew's observance of the Torah and its commandments. The Torah tells us here that our

[22] You must hang him: Although the contextual sense of Scripture mandates hanging all those executed by stoning, the law requires hanging only that those stoned for blasphemy and idolatry.³⁸

Gibbeting after Stoning

- ◆ Second Reading 22 If a man commits a sin for which he is sentenced to death by stoning, and he is indeed put to death in this manner, you must afterward suspend him, i.e., his corpse, on a wooden pole by tying him to it.
 - 23 But you must not leave his body hanging on the pole overnight. Rather, you must bury him on that same day, for showing disrespect for a human corpse by leaving it hanging overnight is an affront to God, for the human form reflects the Divine image.²⁹ Therefore, you must not defile your land, which God, is giving you as an inheritance, by such behavior.

Returning Lost Items

- 22:1 You have been taught³⁰ that you must return a lost item to its owner, even to an enemy. I will now teach you the other details of this law: You must not see your brother Israelite's ox or sheep straying and ignore them. Rather, you must return them to your brother. The exceptions to this rule are: (a) if a priest sees a stray animal in a cemetery, since he may not defile himself by entering a cemetery;³¹ (b) if a distinguished sage sees a stray animal, since he may not degrade himself by leading an animal around in public; and (c) if the loss of potential income incurred by returning the lost animal is greater than the animal's monetary worth.³²
- 2 But if your brother is not near you, or if you do not know who he is, you must bring it into your house. It must remain with you until your brother seeks it out and you then ascertain that it in fact belongs to the person claiming it, whereupon you must return it to him. If the animal can be put to work in the meantime in order to offset the cost of taking care of it, then you may do so. If it cannot be put to work and the cost of taking care of it will exceed is worth, you may sell it and give the owner the money when he claims his animal.

22 If a man commits a sin: In his eulogy of the celebrated Kabbalist Rabbi Moshe Cordovero (known by his initials as "the Ramak," 1522-1570), Rabbi Yitzchak Luria (the Arizal) interpreted this verse as follows:

If a man commits a sin (literally: "if a man has a lacking"): If a person lacks—

For which he is sentenced to death: any reason that he should die, being entirely void of any sin,

And he is put to death: yet he dies nonetheless—

Hang him on a pole (literally, "on wood"): ascribe ("hang") this only to the fact that all people must die as a result of Adam's sin of eating the fruit of the Tree of Knowledge of good and evil.³³

The Talmud also lists four individuals who led sinless lives and died only because of "the venom of the primordial snake": Benjamin, the son of Jacob; Amram, the father of Moses; Jesse, the father of David, and Calev, the son of David.³⁴ Although these statements seem similar, the significant difference is that the Arizal ascribed the Ramak's death to God's

If you see your brother's donkey: If you see your brother, a Jew, acting like a donkey, an unclean animal—
Or his ox: or like an ox, a kosher animal, but an animal nonetheless—

Fallen: that is, he has fallen from the behavior associated with an enlightened human being to the level more associated with animals—

You must not ignore them. You should pick up the load with him: You should feel a brotherly responsibility to elevate and enlighten your fallen fellow Jew. It is precisely in order to assist him that you have been made aware of his spiritual descent. God would not have arranged for you to see him this way unless you were able to help him.⁴⁵

5 A man's attire must not be worn by a woman...:
One of the reasons for this prohibition is that we should ideally behave in a way befitting the way God made us, not trying to imitate someone else or be someone we are not. Rather, we should strive (and be allowed to strive) to fully realize all of our God-given potentials. This ideal applies first of all in a general sense, meaning that although we should strive to imitate or even emulate positive role-models, we should never lose sight of our individual uniqueness, which endows us with a unique contribution that only we can make to the world.

In the context of gender, this directive means that men should strive to actualize all the potentials God gave them as men, and women should strive to actualize all the potentials God gave them as women, in accordance with the guidelines for self-refinement provided by the Torah. Although, as we have noted,⁴⁶ we each comprise male and female qualities, our biological gender is a clear indication which qualities we are meant to chiefly manifest.

This mandate to manifest our God-given potentials free of any societal pressure to be something we are not is true "equal rights." When a woman thinks that "equal rights" means that she should be allowed to behave like a man and to work like a man, she herself is creating a social gap and inequality between the sexes. By pursuing a man's career, she is implicitly affirming that women are intrinsically inferior to men and that therefore, in order to justify her existence, she must compete with men for a man's position. The Torah forbids such an affront to the status of women.⁴⁷

3 So must you do with his donkey, and so must you do with his garment, and so must you do with any lost article of your brother that he has lost and that you have found. You cannot ignore it, for God has commanded you not to.³⁹

Helping

4 Similarly, you have been taught⁴⁰ that you must help someone unload his donkey when the donkey is crouching under its load, even if that person is your enemy. Furthermore, you must not see your brother's donkey or his ox fallen under its load on the road and ignore them. Rather, once the load has been removed and the animal is back on its feet, you should pick up the load together with him and help him put it back on the animal. If, however, the owner tries to take advantage of your obligation to help him by making you load the animal by yourself, you are exempt from doing so.

Here, too,⁴¹ the exceptions to this rule are: (a) if a priest sees an animal fallen under its load in a cemetery, since he may not defile himself by entering a cemetery; (b) if a distinguished sage sees a struggling animal, since he may not degrade himself by loading or unloading an animal in public; and (c) if the loss of potential income incurred by loading the animal is greater than the animal's monetary worth.⁴²

Cross-Dressing

5 A man's attire must not be worn by a woman in order to enable her to fraternize with men, for a woman would seek to do this only in order to entice the men into adultery. Similarly, a man may not wear a woman's garment in order to enable him to fraternize with women, for a man would seek to do this only in order to entice the women into adultery. For whoever does these things—i.e., dresses in ways that lead to adultery—is an abomination to God, your God. The prohibition against men dressing like women also includes removing the hair from around the reproductive organ and from the armpits.

Sending Away a Mother Bird

6 If you happen upon a bird's nest on the road, on any tree, or on the ground, and inside it are chicks or eggs that you would like to take for yourself, then, if the mother is brooding upon the chicks or upon the eggs, you must not take the mother together with her young while she is sitting upon the young.⁴³

Jewish nature will not allow us to ignore this short-coming in our fellow; it will compel us to help him. This is true even, as the next verse continues, "your brother is not near you, or you do not know him." Even in such cases, we must help our fellow Jews retrieve whatever spiritual wealth they have lost due to their inadvertent over-involvement in the mundane affairs of the material world. Furthermore, if necessary, we must educate these compatriots to value this spiritual treasure, "until your brother seeks it out" willingly.⁴⁴

4 You must not see your brother's donkey fallen on the road: Allegorically, this verse can be interpreted as follows:

8 You must make a parapet for your roof: The obligation to build a parapet around the roof applies to all houses, not just newly built ones, and devolves on the individual whenever a house comes into his possession, not only if he builds it. The reason the Torah nonetheless chooses to couch this law in the case of a newly built house is in order to allow the following, allegorical interpretation:

When you build a new house: When you get married and begin to build a new household within the Jewish people, you are commencing a new period in your life, with new responsibilities and tasks that you have never yet had to face. Therefore—

Make a parapet for your roof. The stringencies you have relied on until now to safeguard your observance of the Torah and its commandments are no longer sufficient. The demands of your new lifestyle will undermine your spirituality unless you take on new precautions.

Preventing one who falls off from falling of the roof: For the new, additional involvement with the exigencies of life in the physical world that are associated with marriage is a descent, and you are therefore poised to fall from your previous spiritual level unless you take preventative measures.

Another, more general interpretation:

When you build a new house means "when you set out to make this physical world into a home for God." This house is considered "new" because spiritualizing the physical is a reversal of the order of creation. God made the physical world appear consummately physical; we reveal its inner Divine essence and make it a vehicle for the spiritual.

Make a parapet for your roof: In order to succeed in this mission and avoid being dragged into the materiality of the physical world, we must be sure to remain sufficiently aloof from the world. This we accomplish by setting appropriate boundaries, red lines that we do not cross. This shows that our involvement in the physical world is not for our own betterment or indulgence, but for selfless purposes. In turn, this selflessness opens us up to greater insights into Divine reality and to higher levels of the Divine consciousness that we seek to disseminate.⁵⁴

[7] You must first send away the mother once: Although this is the contextual meaning of the verse, legal exegesis derives from the nuances of the Hebrew that if the mother bird returns, she must be sent away repeatedly until she no longer returns, and only then may the young be taken.⁵⁵ 7 Rather, you must first send away the mother once, and then you may take the young for yourself, and you may take the mother, too, if she returns, 48 in order that it should go well for you, and that you should live long.49

This law applies only to bird nests that you 'happen upon,' but not to nests that are located on your own property; you may take your own birds and/or their young without first sending the mother away.

From the fact that the Torah promises you a good, long life in reward for fulfilling such a simple commandment, which entails no monetary loss, you may deduce that this is the case all the more so for commandments that require greater effort or expense.

To illustrate the prosperity you will merit in reward for fulfilling this commandment, I will now describes a commandment that devolves on someone who acquires or builds a new house.

Furthermore, whenever you fulfill one of God's commandments, He rewards you with the opportunity to fulfill another, similar commandment. In this case, since you sent away the mother bird as an act of compassion for others in the course of doing something for your own benefit (taking the young), you will be granted another opportunity to perform an act of compassion in the course of doing something for your own benefit: when you build yourself a house, you must erect a parapet on its roof to keep others from endangering themselves, as follows.⁵⁰

The Parapet

◆ Third Reading 8 When you build a new house, you must make a parapet for your roof, in order that you not cause blood to be shed in your house by not preventing one who falls from falling off the roof. True, if someone falls to his death, it indicates retroactively that he was destined to be punished for some crime he had committed. Nonetheless, you should try to avoid such an occurrence on your property, for the fact that such a tragedy occurs specifically on your property rather than elsewhere indicates that you, too, are in some way culpable for some wrongdoing.

Mixing Species

9 As a further reward for fulfilling the commandment to send away the mother bird, you will also be blessed with vineyards and fields;⁵¹ this will obligate you in the following commandments: You have already been taught⁵² that you must not sow your field with a mixture of two or more species of grain or vegetables. In addition, you must not sow your vineyard together with a mixture of two or more species of grains or vegetables, lest the increase—both the seed that you sow and the yield of the vineyard—become ipso facto forbidden and therefore out of bounds. If the field has not yet been sown with grapes (and thus is not yet a vineyard), this prohibition is transgressed only if you sow two species of grain or vegetable together with grape seeds, all at once.⁵³

[12] The exception: The Written Torah requires that tassels (tzitziot) be affixed only to garments made of wool or linen, and it theoretically allows tassels made of either wool or linen to be affixed to a garment of either type of fabric, without regard to the prohibition of sha'atnez. However, since only woolen tassels may be dyed turquoise, when the turquoise dye is not used (either because it is unavailable—as is the case nowadays—or too expensive, etc.) and thus all the threads are white, it is possible to affix tassels without having to override the prohibition of sha'atnez (by using tassels made of the same material as the garment), so that is what is done. Nonetheless, the sages prohibited affixing tassels with turquoise-dyed woolen threads on a linen garment, lest a person wear such a garment at night, when the obligation to affix tassels does not apply, and thereby be guilty of transgressing the prohibition of wearing sha'atnez when it is not overridden by the commandment of tzitzit. The sages further required that tassels be affixed to garments made of other fabrics (besides wool or linen), as well. For these garments, the tassels may be made either of the same material as the garment or of wool or linen.64

- 10 As you have been taught,⁵⁶ you must not crossbreed your livestock. As an additional precaution, you must not even plow a field simultaneously with both an ox and a donkey, or for that matter, with any two types of animals. Similarly, you must not drive them together if they are yoked together in order to carry a load.
- 11 As a further reward for fulfilling the commandment to send away the mother bird, you will be blessed with fine clothing;⁵⁷ this will obligate you in the following commandment: As you have been taught,⁵⁸ you must not wear a pressed, woven, or twisted (sha'atnez) mixture of wool and linen together.
- 12 The exception to this is that, as you have been taught,⁵⁹ you must make yourself twisted threads and hang them as tassels on the four corners of your garment with which you cover yourself. Each tassel is made of four threads, one of which, if properly dyed, must be woolen; such tassels may be attached even to linen garments.⁶⁰

Just as doing a good deed leads to the opportunity to perform further good deeds, transgressing a commandment leads to the temptation to transgress further commandments, as the following laws illustrate:

Allegations of Pretended Chastity

- 13 If a man takes a wife, has marital relations with her, and hates her, thereby transgressing the prohibition against hating one's fellow Jew,⁶¹
- 14 and then accuses her of improper conduct and slanders her, thereby transgressing the commandment not to slander one's fellow Jew,⁶² saying in her presence to the judges of the court—since a plaintiff may only state his case to the judge in the presence of the defendant—'I took this woman as my wife, and when I approached her through marital relations, I did not find any evidence of virginity for her, and in fact, after looking into the matter, I found witnesses who can testify that she had relations with another man after I betrothed her, and that she was warned beforehand that these relations were forbidden,'
- 15 the girl's father and her mother must, if they can, obtain evidence of the girl's virginity, that is, witnesses who can confute the testimony of the husband's witnesses, and bring them to the elders of the city (i.e., the judges) at the gate (i.e., the court). The duty to prove the girl's innocence devolves upon her parents, for they are deemed culpable for having produced and raised a child whose conduct can be at all suspect.⁶³
- 16 Even though both parents come to the court, only the girl's father must say to the elders (for it is considered an affront to the mother's dignity to have her speak publicly on her husband's behalf in his presence), 'I gave my daughter to this man as a wife, and he hated her,

they must die: the girl, because she did not cry out for help—for since the crime occurred in the city, she would have been heard had she cried out—and she may therefore be construed to have consented to the crime; and the man, because he violated his neighbor's wife.⁷² By executing them, you will eliminate this evil from your midst.

The girl, besides evincing her consent by not having cried out, is also at fault because she exposed herself to danger by venturing outside in lonely, unfrequented areas.

^{72.} See on Numbers 30:7.

- 17 and behold, he accused her of improper conduct, saying to me, "I did not find evidence of your daughter's virginity." But here is the evidence of my daughter's virginity! And the parents must display their evidence, making their case as figuratively spotless as a white sheet before the elders of the city. The court must examine the testimony of the witnesses of both the husband's and the wife's parents, and decide which is to be believed.
- 18 If they decide in favor of the wife, the elders of that city must take the man—the husband—and chasten him by administering lashes to him.
- 19 They must furthermore fine him 100 shekels of silver because he slandered a Jewish virgin, and he must give it to the girl's father, since, as above, it was her parents who were chiefly implicated in his accusation. She must continue to be his wife; he may not send her away (i.e., divorce her) as long as he lives, even should he want to.⁶⁵
- 20 If, on the other hand, this matter was true, and indeed, no evidence of the girl's virginity was found, but the testimony of the husband's witnesses was accepted,
- 21 they must take the girl out to the entrance of her father's house, as if saying to her parents, 'see what sort of daughter you have reared!' The witnesses must then attempt to kill her in the presence of all the men of her city by the usual stoning procedure: 66 first by pushing her off an elevation twice her height; if the fall does not kill her, by then casting a heavy stone on her chest; if this, too, fails, the populace must pelt her with stones. She must die for she did a disgraceful thing in Israel, committing adultery against her betrothed husband while still living in her father's house. So must you eliminate this evil from your midst.

Adultery

- 22 As you have been taught, adultery is forbidden,⁶⁷ and if a man is found for-nicating with a married woman, and they were both forewarned and then witnessed in the act, both of them must be tried by the court and put to death by strangulation⁶⁸—the man who fornicated with the woman as well as the woman. But this is true only if they engaged in actual coitus, for only in this way are both parties equally guilty of the pleasure they took in the act. By executing them, you will eliminate this evil from Israel. The court must execute the adulteress without delay even if she is pregnant. A further party who commits adultery with the adulteress after she has been sentenced is also guilty of adultery and is executed.
- 23 However, you have also been taught⁶⁹ that if the adulteress is the daughter of a priest, she is executed by burning rather than by strangulation. There is another case where the punishment for adultery is not strangulation: If there is a virgin girl betrothed⁷⁰ to a man, and another man finds her in the city and fornicates with her,
- 24 you must take them both to the gate (i.e., the court) of that city, and if it can be proven that they were warned and that the crime was witnessed, and the court convicts them, they must be put to death by stoning:71 by pushing them (separately) off an elevation twice their height; failing that, by casting a heavy stone on their chests; failing that, you (the populace) must pelt them with stones. Thus cloak, i.e., fornicate with his sister-in-law who is waiting for him to either marry her or release her.

Restrictions on Conversion and Marriage

2 A Jewish man with injured testicles or whose reproductive organ is cut such that his reproductive seed oozes rather than ejaculates, thus disabling him from having children naturally, may not enter the assembly of GoD by marrying a born Jewess. He may, however, marry a convert or a freed bondwoman.⁷⁹

^{79.} Mishneh Torah, Isurei Biah 16:1.

- 25 But if a man finds the betrothed girl in the field, and the man overpowers her and fornicates with her, then, if it can be proven in court that the assailant was warned and the crime was witnessed, and the court convicts him, only the man who fornicated with her must be put to death.
- 26 In this case, you must take no punitive action against the girl. The girl presumably did not commit adultery, which is a sin deserving of death, for just as a man rises up against his fellow and murders him, so is this case,
- 27 because he found her in the field: the betrothed girl may be presumed to have cried out, but there was no one to rescue her.

The cases of murder and violation of a betrothed woman share additional similarities, as well: in both cases, if a person is given the choice to commit the sin or be killed, he must surrender his life rather than commit the crime; and in both cases, it is permissible to prevent the crime by killing the assailant.

Ravishment

- 28 You have been taught⁷³ that if a man seduces a virgin who is not betrothed, he must marry her. Similarly, if a man finds a virgin girl who was not betrothed, but in this case does not seduce her but seizes her and fornicates with her, and they are discovered, i.e., witnessed,
- 29 then the man who fornicated with her must give fifty shekels of silver to the girl's father, and, if she and her father so desire, he must marry her: she must become his wife because he violated her. He may not send her away (i.e., divorce her) without cause as long as he lives.⁷⁴

Forbidden Marriages

23:1 You have been taught⁷⁵ that you may not fornicate with your father's wife, even if she is not your mother. Furthermore, a man may not take his father's wife in marriage (if, for example, the father had died or divorced the step-mother), and if he does, the marriage has no legal validity.

You have been taught⁷⁶ that a man may not fornicate with his father's sister-inlaw. You will soon be taught⁷⁷ that if a married man dies childless, his brother is required to either marry the widow or release her formally from this obligation to marry him. If a person's paternal uncle had died and his widowed aunt is waiting for his father to either marry her or to release her from her obligation to marry him, the son's fornication with her (still) falls under the prohibition against fornication with one's father's sister-in-law. Besides this, however, fornication with one's aunt in this specific situation is subject to an additional prohibition (which obligates the transgressor to offer up a second, additional sin-offering if he commits the crime unintentionally⁷⁸): that one may not figuratively uncover the corner of his father's

[4-9] Restrictions on Conversion based on Nationality: Nowadays, these restrictions no longer apply, since already in the era of the First Temple (6th century BCE), King Sennacherib of Assyria mingled all the non-Jewish nations in his empire—including these—together. It is therefore no longer possible to definitively determine who is a Moabite, Ammonite, Edomite, or Egyptian; therefore, any non-Jew who desires to convert is presumed to be one of the majority of gentiles, whose converts are permitted to marry born Jews without restriction.⁹²

^{92.} Berachot 28a, based on Isaiah 10:13.

- 3 A bastard is defined as someone born of any forbidden union punishable by excision (when committed without having been witnessed and therefore not subject to being tried in court),⁸⁰ except union with a menstruant.⁸¹ Such a bastard may not enter the assembly of GoD by marrying a legitimate born Jew. A bastard may, however, marry another bastard or a convert.⁸² Even the tenth generation descendant of a bastard, and in fact all his or her descendants for all time, may not enter the assembly of GoD.
- 4 As you know, Ammon and Moab were the bastard sons of Lot.⁸³ Thus, in accordance with the above rule, a male Ammonite or Moabite, even if he converts to Judaism, may not enter the assembly of God by marrying a born Jewess. Even the tenth generation male descendant of the Ammonite or Moabite convert, and in fact all his male descendants for all time may never enter the assembly of God,
- 5 because, in addition, the Ammonites and Moabites did not greet you with bread and water when you were exhausted from traveling through the desert⁸⁴ after you left Egypt, and because the people of Moab hired Balaam the son of Beor from Petor in Aram Naharaim against you, to curse you,⁸⁵ and themselves enticed you into sinning by his wicked counsel at Shitim.⁸⁶
- 6 But God, your God, did not want to listen to Balaam, so God, your God, transformed the curse into a blessing for you, 87 because God, your God, loves you.
- 7 You must not ever look out for their welfare or their good, all your days. Even though you must otherwise allow escaped slaves to seek asylum in your land,⁸⁸ you may not grant asylum to escaped Ammonite or Moabite slaves.
- ◆ Fourth Reading 8 In contrast, you must not similarly despise an Edomite by not allowing him to ever marry into your fold—even though the Edomites were hostile to you during your desert trek⁸⁹—for, by virtue of being a descendant of Jacob's brother Esau, ⁹⁰ he is your brother. Likewise, you must not similarly despise an Egyptian by not allowing him to ever marry into your fold—even though the Egyptians murdered your children—for you were a sojourner in his land and were sustained there when there was a famine in your own land.
 - 9 Rather, children who are born to Edomites of Egyptians in the third generation after their conversion may enter the assembly of GoD by marrying born Jews.

Thus you see that causing someone to sin (as the Moabites did to you) is more harmful than actual violence (which the Edomites sought to inflict upon you) or murder (which the Egyptians perpetrated against you); therefore, those guilty of the first crime are to be excluded from the Jewish people forever, whereas those guilty of the second and third are to be excluded only for two generations.

Converts from other nations, however, as well as female Ammonite and Moabite converts, 91 may marry born Jews immediately upon conversion.

17 Rather, he must be allowed to reside among you wherever he chooses within any of your cities, where it is good for him. The court must instruct his master, if Jewish, to free him, thus making him a convert to Judaism, and his value on the slave market becomes a debt that he must pay to his former master when he is able to. Just as you must not taunt an ordinary convert about his past, ⁹⁹ you must also not taunt this former slave, who is now a convert.

However, if a non-Jewish slave flees from his Jewish master who lives inside the Land of Israel, you may return him to him.

Purity of the Army Camp

- 10 Although you must of course be careful at all times to behave properly, when you go forth as a military camp against your enemies, you must be especially wary of doing any evil thing, for, as you know,⁹³ the accusing angel (Satan) prosecutes against people particularly when they enter into a dangerous situation.
- 11 As you know,⁹⁴ if a man has a seminal emission, he must remain outside the inner two camps of your traveling formation⁹⁵ until purifying himself. You must maintain similar standards of ritual purity in your military camp. Thus, if there be among you in your military camp a man who becomes ritually defiled due to a nocturnal (or diurnal) seminal emission, he must go outside the camp. He must not re-enter the camp until he purifies himself according to the prescribed procedure:⁹⁶
- 12 During the day—towards evening at the latest—he must immerse himself in the water of a mikveh, and then, when the sun sets and he is thereby rendered ritually pure, he may re-enter the camp.
- 13 Just as you must maintain the highest standards of ritual purity in your military camp, so must you maintain proper hygienic standards, as well. Thus, just as you have latrines outside the camps of your traveling formation, ⁹⁷ you must similarly have a designated place outside the military camp, so that you can go out there to use it as a latrine.
- 14 Furthermore, you must keep a stake on your person in addition to your weapons, and when you sit down outside to relieve yourself, you must dig with it, and thus, rather than just walking away, you must turn back and cover your excrement.
- 15 For God, your God, accompanies you in the midst of your military camp, to rescue you and to deliver your enemies before you. Therefore, your camp must be kept holy, so that He not see anything unseemly in you and because of that turn away, so to speak, from you, withdrawing His protection.

Slavery

16 You may not hand over a Jewish slave to his non-Jewish master if he has fled from him and seeks refuge with you from his master. Similarly, when a non-Jewish slave flees from his Jewish master living outside the Land of Israel and seeks refuge with you inside the Land of Israel, you may not hand over such a slave to his master if he seeks refuge with you from his master. In both these cases, the slave, by fleeing his master, has demonstrated that he seeks to free himself from his non-holy milieu (i.e., either the non-Jewish master or the non-Jewish land); this being the case, you must not return him to the negative influences of such an environment.

24 In addition to being subject to a restrictive commandment—not delaying the fulfillment of a vow—this rule is also subject to an active commandment: Observe and do whatever issues from your lips exactly as you have vowed to God, your God. The same applies to a sacrificial dedication¹⁰⁴ that you have uttered with your mouth.

[18] A male prostitute: The Torah has already declared male homosexuality a capital offense, 105 so it makes no sense to legislate additional punishment for someone who makes this activity into his profession. Therefore, the Oral Law understands the import of this verse to be referring to the passive participant in male homosexuality, making him liable to the same punishment as the active participant. 106

Prostitution

18 As you have been taught, 100 there must be no prostitute among the daughters of Israel, and there must be no male prostitute, available for homosexual relations, among the sons of Israel.

Similarly, a Jewish woman may not marry a non-Jewish bondman, nor may a Jewish man marry a non-Jewish bondwoman. Even though these non-Jewish bondservants are obligated to observe some commandments, ¹⁰¹ they are nevertheless not full Jews; as such, no marriage tie can exist between them and full Jews. Thus, any fornication between Jews and them is akin to prostitution.

19 If, nevertheless, someone does work as a prostitute, or if there is a non-Jewish prostitute among you, you may not bring what was paid as a prostitute's fee as a sacrifice. Nor may you bring what was paid as the price of a dog as a sacrifice. Neither of these may be brought to the House of God, your God, (i.e., the Tabernacle or the Temple) in order to fulfill any sacrificial vow, because both of them are an abomination to God, your God—the prostitute's fee because it is the result of prostitution, and the price of a dog because dogs are prone to brazenness and often inflict damage.¹⁰²

Even if the form of the original payment was changed—for example, if the prostitute was paid with grapes, which were then made into wine; or she was paid with olives, which were then pressed into oil, etc.—the resultant product is still forbidden to be offered up.

Interest

- 20 As you have been taught, 103 you may not take interest on loans. In addition, when you pay back a loan, you must not pay interest to your brother, whether it be interest on money, interest on food, or interest on any other item on which interest is normally taken when given as a loan.
- 21 You may however, pay interest to a gentile on a loan you took from him. But you must not pay interest to your brother, in order that God, your God, bless you in all your endeavors on the land that you are entering in order to possess.

Thus, someone who pays interest to a fellow Jew transgresses three commandments: the two statements of the restrictive commandment in these two verses and the one active commandment (paying interest only to gentiles) in the second verse.

Sacrificial Vows

- 22 When you make a vow to offer up a sacrifice to God, your God, you must not delay in fulfilling it by letting three pilgrim festivals pass before offering up the sacrifice, for God, your God, will demand it of you, and it will be counted as a sin for you.
- 23 On the other hand, if you refrain from making sacrificial vows to begin with, you will not accrue any sin. So be careful not to make sacrificial vows that you are not reasonably sure you will be able to fulfill.

[26] Tithing...the first of the dough: The obligation to tithe grain (ma'aser) takes effect only once the grain has been winnowed and gathered into smooth piles;113 the obligation to set aside the first portion of the dough (challah) for the priests takes effect only once the grain has been ground into flour and mixed with water to make dough.114 Thus, if the grain is being grown in order to eventually be made into bread, the worker may eat from the grain until it is made into dough. Similarly, grapes grown to be made into wine and olives grown to be made into oil are not subject to the obligation of tithing until they have been made into their respective products; in contrast, if they are grown to be eaten as fruits, they are subject to the obligation of tithing as soon as they are harvested. 115

Foods that are not subject to any specific commandments: The Written Torah only subjects grain, wine, and olive-oil to the obligation to separate terumah and ma'aser from them. Other vegetables and fruits are subject to these obligations by Rabbinic decree. 116

[1] Divorce: From the wording of this verse, it is clear that only the husband can legally initiate divorce proceedings. If the wife, however, feels that there are grounds for divorce and the husband does not agree, she may present her case to the court, and if it is found to be just, they are allowed to force the husband to divorce his wife. 117 The wife, however, may not be divorced against her will. 118

Grounds for divorce are defined here as "an unseemly matter." This somewhat vague term is understood in Jewish law to include a wide range of circumstances, including (but not limited to) incompatibility, physical impediments to marital relations, childlessness, various types of mistreatment, verbal or physical abuse, irreligion, irresponsibility, spiteful behavior, and infidelity.¹¹⁹

Nevertheless, the high value that the Torah places on marital harmony—witnessed by the fact that Aaron is praised as promoting peace between husband and wife¹²⁰ and that God allows His Name to be erased in order to rehabilitate a

Workers' Perquisites

- ◆ Fifth Reading 25 If you have been hired as a harvester and, in this capacity, you enter your neighbor's vineyard during the harvest season, you may eat as many grapes as you desire, but only until you are sated, but you may not put any into your container to eat later. However, if you are an employee not working specifically at harvesting, you are not allowed this privilege.
 - 26 Similarly, if you have been hired as a harvester and, in this capacity, you enter your neighbor's field of standing grain during the harvest season, you may pick the ears of grain manually in order to eat the kernels, but you may not lift a sickle upon your neighbor's standing grain to cut any of it for yourself.

This perquisite is limited to situations in which (a) you are working with vegetative product (as opposed to milk, cheese, etc.) and (b) the produce has not been processed to the point that it has become liable to all the commandments that (otherwise) devolve upon it before it may be eaten (e.g., tithing¹⁰⁷ in the case of grapes grown for eating, or setting aside the first of the dough¹⁰⁸ in the case of grain grown to be made into bread).¹⁰⁹ If you are working with vegetative produce that is not subject to any specific commandments before being eaten, you may eat from it only until it has reached similar stages in its processing.¹¹⁰

Despite your employer's obligation to allow you eat as you work, he is not punished if he prevents you from doing so.¹¹¹

Divorce

24:1 If a man takes a wife and has marital relations with her, and she becomes unfavorable to him because he discovers in her an unseemly moral matter, he should write her a bill of divorce and place it into her hand, and thus send her away from his house.

⊗ CHASIDIC INSIGHTS ଔ

25-26 If you have been hired: On an allegorical level, the neighbor in these verses, who owns the vine-yard and field and employs the laborers, alludes to God, and the laborer who works in them alludes to the Jew, who is created to serve his Master.

In this context, working the grain field represents our duty-bound acceptance of our obligation to perform God's will in fulfillment of our Divine mission. Just as grain is the basic, necessary component of the diet, so is the most fundamental aspect of our relationship with God the acceptance of His sovereignty and observance of His commandments precisely as He wishes.

Working the vineyard, on the other hand, alludes to the deeper relationship with God that is characterized by the experience of sublime pleasure. Just as the grapes are a sweet addition to the normal staples of the diet, so does this aspect of our relationship take us beyond the letter of the law. When we are spiritually mature enough to feel pleasure and joy in the revelation of Godliness, we are inspired to express our awareness of God in all facets of our lives, not only in the ways the Torah expressly requires us to do so.

With this in mind, we can understand why the Torah first discusses the right of the laborer to eat the sweet fruit of the vineyard before it mentions his right to eat grain, even though grain is the more basic food. We are first informed that those who experience sublime pleasure in their relationship with God and are thereby inspired to exert themselves to fulfill their Divine mission beyond the letter of the law will be rewarded by receiving further, more transcendent revelations of Divinity and

[continued...] shaky marriage¹²⁵—has always rendered divorce a last resort. In the sages' words, "When a man divorces the wife of his youth, the altar itself sheds tears." ¹²⁶ Thus, despite the broad range of legal grounds for divorce, divorce has historically been relatively rare in Jewish life. This is largely due to the innate resilience of the Jewish marriage, which, in addition to being attributable to the Torah's guidelines for human behavior in general, is largely attributable to the laws governing the periodicity of marital relations. ¹²⁷

If, however, divorce is determined to be justifiable, the Torah attaches no stigma to it; it is considered a perfectly legitimate release from an unviable relationship.

^{121.} Cf. above, 20:8. 122. See above, 20:5-6. 123. Exodus 21:16. 124. Mishneh Torah, Geneivah 9:2. 125. See on Numbers 5:23. 126. Gitin 90b, based on Malachi 2:11-15. 127. See on Leviticus 15:19-32

- 2 If, after she leaves his house, she goes and marries another man without having mended her ways, and this man marries her despite her persistent, unseemly moral behavior,
- 3 the latter husband will eventually either come to hate her and write her, too, a bill of divorce, place it into her hand, and thus send her away from his house or, if he does not do so, the latter husband who took her as a wife will die because of her.
- 4 In such a case—or in the case of any divorced woman who marries a second husband who then either divorces her or dies—her first husband, who had sent her away, may not take her again as his wife, since she was defiled to him by having relations with someone else in the interim, for that is an abomination before God. Therefore, you must not thereby bring sin upon the land that God, your God, is giving you as an inheritance.

However, a divorced woman may remarry her original husband if she did not have relations with anyone else after having divorced him.

Army Exemptions

♦ Sixth Reading 5 When a man takes a new wife, he must not go out as a solider in the army, nor must he be obligated to do anything for it in a civil capacity, such as supplying water or food, or repairing roads.¹¹¹ He must remain exempt from army duty in order to attend to his home affairs for one year and gladden his wife whom he has taken. This law applies only if the man is marrying this woman for the first time, even if she was married to someone else before, but not if he is remarrying his ex-wife.

Similarly, someone who has begun to live in a new house but has not yet lived in it for a full year, as well as someone has begun to eat the fourth-year fruits of his recently planted vineyard (these being the first fruits permitted to be eaten) but that year is not yet over,¹²² is also exempt from all army service until the end of these respective years.

Collateral

6 When a loan comes due and the borrower does not have the means to repay it, the lender may take him to court and demand collateral against the unpaid loan, but he must not take anything essential to the debtor's life or livelihood, such as the latter's lower or upper millstone, as collateral, because by doing so, he is in effect taking the life of his debtor as collateral—since the debtor will starve to death if he cannot grind grain to bake bread.

Kidnapping

7 As you have been taught, ¹²³ if a man or woman kidnaps any person from among his brothers, of the Israelites, and then enslaves him and finally sells him, that thief must be put to death by strangulation by the court, provided that the culprit was warned prior to the kidnapping, enslavement, and sale, and was witnessed doing all three. If, however, any of these conditions is not met, the culprit is not liable to the death penalty. ¹²⁴ You must, by executing the culprit according to due process of law, eliminate the evil of kidnapping from your midst.

the sun set before paying his wage. This is doubly so if he is poor, since, because he is poor, he depends upon his wage, as evidenced by the fact that he risks his life to earn it if necessary. Therefore, pay him on time so that he not cry out to GoD against you. The demerit of this sin will be counted against you in any case, but if the employee cries out to God, God will be quicker to administer corrective punishment against you.

Tzara'at

8 As you have been taught, 128 certain types of dermal lesions, which exhibit specific secondary symptoms, are diagnosed as the condition termed tzara'at, which renders someone afflicted with it ritually defiled and thus not allowed to enter the camp. 129 Regarding the lesion of tzara'at, take care not to pluck out the hairs that constitute its symptoms or to cut away the lesion itself. On the contrary, take care to meticulously safeguard the practice of these laws by studying the Torah's instructions regarding how to observe them, in order to perform them properly. Only in this way can you take care to act in accordance with all that the Levite priests instruct you, as I have commanded them.

9 But, of course, it is even better to avoid tzara'at altogether, by not engaging in slander. To that end, remember what God, your God, did to my sister Miriam when we were traveling through the desert after you left Egypt: she spoke slanderously against me, and God immediately afflicted her with tzara'at.¹³⁰

- 10 As you have been taught,¹³¹ when a loan comes due and the borrower does not have the means to repay it, the lender may take him to court and demand collateral against the unpaid loan. Similarly, when you demand back something that you loaned your fellow Jew—even something other than money—and he cannot return it to you immediately, you may demand collateral. However, you must not enter his home to take his collateral.
- 11 Rather, you must stand outside, and the person from whom you are demanding the return of what you loaned him must bring the collateral to you outside.
- 12 Also, as you have been taught, ¹³² if he is a poor man, and the only thing in his possession that he can give you as collateral is his night clothing, you must not lie down to sleep with his collateral still in your possession.
- 13 Rather, you must return the collateral to him by sunset, so that he may lie down to sleep in his garment. Similarly, if he is a night-worker and gives you his daytime clothing as collateral, you must return it to him by morning. He will bless you for your consideration, and even if he does not, it will be counted for you as a merit before God, your God.

Employees' Wages

- ◆ Seventh Reading 14 As you have been taught, ¹³³ you must not pay your employees late. If the employee happens to be poor, paying late is subject to an additional prohibition: You must not withhold the wages of a poor or destitute employee, whether he be one of your brothers, i.e., an Israelite, or one of your converts. This prohibition applies both to his salary and to the fee you owe him for renting his animals or equipment for use in your land. Furthermore, this prohibition also applies to a poor or destitute employee who is one of the resident aliens ¹³⁴ in your cities.
 - 15 Rather, you must give him his wage on his promised day. Even if he is not poor, if he is a night-worker—who is due payment at sunrise¹³⁵—you must not let must not glean the young grapes growing on the part of the vine not sufficiently developed to have its grapes hanging from either a true stem or ancillary shoots, and you must not go back to pick up what you have forgotten behind you;¹⁴² it must be left for the convert, the orphan, and the widow.

22 Here, too: if, because of these rules, you incur some monetary loss, this is immaterial: You must remember that you were a slave in Egypt, and that God redeemed you from there on the condition that you obey Him even if doing so seems disadvantageous. I therefore command you to do this thing even though it might sometimes cause you financial loss.

^{142.} Mishneh Torah, Matnot Aniyim 5:16.

Legal Justice

16 Fathers must not be put to death by the court by virtue of their sons' testimony, nor must sons be put to death by virtue of their fathers' testimony—and in fact, all first-degree relatives of the defendant are automatically disqualified as legal witnesses.

An adult may be put to death by the court only for his own transgression and not for anyone else's. Minors, however, are sometimes put to death by the heavenly court for their parents' transgressions.

Consideration for the Disadvantaged

17 As you have been taught,¹³⁶ you must not pervert justice. With regard to certain categories of litigants, perverting justice is subject to an additional prohibition: You must not pervert the judgment of a convert or an orphan, for these people are at a distinct psychological disadvantage, making it easier for you to overlook their plight.

Similarly, although you have been taught that it is generally permitted to take collateral against payment for a loan that has come due,¹³⁷ there is an exception: you must not take a widow's garment as collateral, for even if she is rich, she is suffering from a psychological disadvantage.

18 If, in obeying these rules, you incur some expense or loss, that is immaterial: You must remember that you were a slave in Egypt, and that God, your God, redeemed you from there on the condition that you obey Him even if doing so seems disadvantageous. I therefore command you to do this thing even though it might sometimes cause you financial loss.

19 As you have been taught, ¹³⁸ when harvesting your crops, you must intentionally leave certain portions of it for the disadvantaged. In addition, when you reap your harvest in your field and forget to gather some grain that is left behind you—such as a sheaf—and the volume of this grain is less than two se'ah (16.5 liters or 15 dry quarts), or even if you forget to reap some of the grain standing in the field in back of you, you must not go back to take it. It must be left for the convert, the orphan, and the widow, in order that God, your God, bless you in all that you do. In contrast, this rule does not apply to grain that is still in front of you as you proceed to harvest your field.

If God blesses you for your unintentional beneficence, how much more so will He bless you for your intentional beneficence!

20 Just as when you reap your grain, you must leave the grain in the corner of the field¹³⁹ and the forgotten grain for the disadvantaged,¹⁴⁰ so must you do the same when harvesting your olive grove: When you beat your olive tree in order to harvest its olives, you must not totally remove its glory by picking all its fruit, and you must not go back to pick up what you have forgotten on the ground behind you; it must be left for the convert, the orphan, and the widow.

21 As you have been taught,141 when you pick the grapes of your vineyard, you

Jewish woman,¹⁴⁸ the dead man's wife will not thereby be automatically free to marry an outsider, that is, anyone other than her brother-in-law. Rather, ideally, her husband's brother must cohabit with her, thereby taking her as a wife for himself, thus marrying her in levirate marriage.

≈ A CLOSER LOOK ❖

[5-10] Levirate Marriage. It is clear from these verses that ideally, performing levirate marriage is preferable to avoiding it by means of the shoe-removal ceremony (termed chalitzah ["removal"]) described herein. Nonetheless, the Mishnah, conscious of the decline in the spiritual stature of the Jewish people in its day,¹⁴⁹ already notes that "formerly, when they performed [levi-rate marriage] with the sole intention of fulfilling God's commandment, the rabbis held that levirate marriage takes precedence over chalitzah. Nowadays, when it may no longer be assumed that they will perform it with the sole intention of fulfilling God's commandment, chalitzah takes precedence."¹⁵⁰ Since marrying one's sister-in-law is otherwise forbidden, the concern was that

Resolving Disputes

25:1 If a friendly argument arises between people and they take it to court, the court can either propose a compromise between them or render a definitive judgment; in either case, since there is no animosity between the parties, the dispute will end peacefully. If, however, there is a hostile quarrel between people, such that they are not interested in a compromise, they should approach the court for a definitive judgment. In such a case, the judges must judge them; even though they know that rendering judgment will only solve the particular lawsuit and not end their quarrel, and even though it is likely that both parties are guilty of exaggerating their claims and in this respect neither is wholly innocent or guilty, they must nonetheless judge the specific lawsuit they have been approached to judge and acquit the innocent party and condemn the guilty party.¹⁴³

Lashes

- 2 As you have been taught,¹⁴⁴ the standard corrective punishment for transgressing a passive commandment whose effect cannot be counteracted by performing a correlating active commandment is lashes. This is how the court is to administer lashes: If, as a result of a court case, the guilty party has incurred the penalty of lashes, the judge must have him bend over—not letting him either stand up straight or sit—and have the sheriff flog him, administering one-third of the number of lashes in front of him, i.e., on his chest, and two-thirds on his back, as befits his crime. While lashes are being administered, the judge must recite two verses that I will articulate later.¹⁴⁵ The maximum number of lashes
- 3 the sheriff must administer to him must be either one less than forty (i.e., 39) or however many it is determined that he can bear, whichever is less. ¹⁴⁶ The sheriff must not exceed these prescribed 39 lashes, lest—by flogging him even once more—he give him what would be considered a much more severe flogging than these 39 prescribed lashes, inasmuch as striking another person (other than when the Torah expressly demands it) is forbidden. Furthermore, if the sheriff administers extra lashes, your brother will be belittled in your eyes, and once he has received his due punishment, you must no longer relate to him as a criminal but once again as your brother—giving all the respect due a fellow human being.

Work Animals

4 You must not muzzle an ox when it is threshing grain in order to prevent it from eating the grain, or in fact prevent any animal working with food from eating some of that food as it works.

Levirate Marriage

5 As you have been taught, ¹⁴⁷ you must not marry your brother-in-law or sister-in-law. There is, however, an exception to this law. If paternal or full brothers 'reside' together, meaning that they are both alive at the same time (as opposed to if the second one had been born after the first one had died), and one of them dies having no son, daughter, or grandchild, neither from his wife nor from any other

[continued...] if the brother-in-law would marry her with anything less than pure intentions, it might undermine the validity of the marriage, rendering any children born through it of doubtful legitimacy.

In any case, once polygamy was abolished for Ashkenazic communities by Rabbi Gershom ben Meir in the 11th century, levirate marriage could only be practiced in these communities if the surviving brother was single. Nevertheless, levirate marriage was practiced in Ashkenazic communities under certain circumstances until approximately the 12th century, and in some Sephardic communities until relatively recent times.¹⁵⁴

6 The primary duty to marry the dead man's wife devolves upon the eldest brother; if the eldest brother prefers not to marry his widowed sister-in-law, then one of the other brothers should be approached to do so.¹⁵¹ The obligation for one of the brothers to marry the widowed sister-in-law only applies if she can bear children and if her deceased husband was capable of having children.

The brother who marries her will succeed to his brother's estate in his deceased brother's name. By managing his brother's estate, his brother's name will not be obliterated from Israel, for that estate will always be remembered as the one that had belonged to his brother.

Since the object of this law is that the surviving brother perpetuate the estate of the deceased brother (including whatever he inherited from their common father), it applies, as stated above, only to paternal or full brothers—since only such brothers jointly inherit their father's estate, and not brothers who are related only maternally.

- 7 If, for some legitimate reason, the man does not wish to take his late brother's wife as his own wife, and neither do any of the other brothers, the late brother's wife must go up to the gate, i.e., the court, and to the elders, i.e., the judges, and say to them, 'My husband's brother has refused to perpetuate his brother's name in Israel. He does not want to marry me.'
- 8 The elders of his city must then summon him and speak to him, and he must stand up and say, 'I do not want to take her as a wife.'
- 9 His brother's wife must then approach him in view of the elders and remove his shoe from his foot. She must spit on the ground in front of him and respond to his refusal to marry her by saying, 'Thus must be done to the man who will not build up his brother's household!' The declarations both the brother and the widow must be made in Hebrew.
- 10 The name of the brother performing this ceremony of release must then be called one time, in the community of Israel as represented by those present at the ceremony, 'This is the house of he who had his shoe removed.' They must all say in unison and in Hebrew, '[This is] he who had his shoe removed!'

Once the ceremony is completed, neither the brother who performed the ceremony nor any of his brothers may thereafter reconsider and marry the widowed sisterin-law, and she is permitted to marry outside the family.

Compensation for Embarrassment

11 As you have been taught, ¹⁵² when one person inflicts some bodily injury on another person, the perpetrator must compensate the victim for damages, pain, medical expenses, and/or loss of work from incapacitation. In addition, the perpetrator must compensate the victim for any embarrassment suffered from the injury. For example, if two men, a man and his brother Israelite, are quarreling, and instead

⊗ CHASIDIC INSIGHTS ଔ

17 You must remember what Amalek did to you: When we feel inspired to elevate ourselves beyond the limitations of physical reality, our evil inclination (here personified by Amalek) rises to distract and discourage us. The antidote to Amalek is to "remember"; to keep the holy words of the Torah in the forefront of our consciousness. ¹⁶¹

In the beginning of the parashah, the enemy's intrinsic might—enabling it to capture parts of reality—was contrasted with our inherent advantage as Jews over our enemy. Here, too, the ability of Amalek to contend with the Jewish people and "cool off" our relationship with God is contrasted with the commandment to wipe them out and the implied assurance of our ability to do this. 162

12 you, i.e., the court, must figuratively cut off her hand, i.e., make her pay him the sum of money that a person of his social status should accept as compensation for being embarrassed this way by someone of her social status. You must not take pity on her by reducing or waiving her fine unless it can be demonstrated that there was no other way she could have rescued her husband.¹⁵⁵

Honesty in Business

- 13 As you have been taught, ¹⁵⁶ you must not do business with false weights and measures. Moreover, you are not even allowed to possess such weights and measures: You must not keep two different weights in your pocket that you purport to be of the same measurement: a heavy one that you could cheat with by using it for buying and a light one that you could cheat with by using it for selling.
- 14 Similarly, you must not keep two different ephah-measures in your house: a large one for buying and a small one for selling.
- 15 Rather, you may only possess full and correct weights and only a full and correct ephah-measure. Refrain from possessing false weights and measures in order that you live long on the land that God, your God, is giving you. For if you do not, God will incite your enemies to attack you, threatening your continued possession of the land.¹⁵⁷
- 16 Refrain from possessing false weights and measures, as well, in order that God may arrange for you to prosper. For whoever does such wicked things, whoever perpetrates such injustice, is an abomination to God, your God, and God will undermine such a person's efforts to earn a livelihood.

Remembering Amalek

- ◆ Maftir 17 You have been taught¹⁵⁸ that God will obliterate any remembrance of the nation of Amalek. You, too, must do your part in obliterating anything that could cause anyone to think about Amalek. Therefore, you must remember what the nation of Amalek did to you when you were traveling through the desert after you left Egypt and remember to take the steps necessary to obliterate any trace of Amalek.
 - 18 Specifically, remember how, on the way, Amalek attacked by surprise those among you who had sinned and had therefore been expelled from the protective Clouds of Glory, and then defiled these men by engaging in homosexual relations with them, and finally cut off the reproductive organs of all these men who were weakened by sin and who were therefore outside the clouds, at your rear. ¹⁵⁹ Amalek did all this after you had been faint from thirst at Refidim and were weary from the journey, and they did not fear retribution from God in attacking you. By being the first to attack you, Amalek weakened all other nations' fear of you.

19 תִּמְחָה אֶת זַכֶּר עֲמְלַק. מֵאִישׁ וְעַד אִשְּׁה, מֵעוֹלֵל אֲפִלּוּ עַל הַבְּהֵמְה, לוֹמַר: בְּהֵמְה זוֹ מִשֶּׁל עֲמְלֵק הָיָתָה: וְעַד יוֹנֵק, מִשׁוֹר וְעַד שֵׂה, שֵׁלֹא יִהֵא שֶׁם עֲמָלֵק נִזְכָּר חסלת פרשת כי תצא 19 Therefore, in order to restore your esteem in the world's eyes, 163 when God, your God, grants you respite from all your enemies surrounding you in the land that God, your God, is giving you to possess as an inheritance you can bequeath to your descendants, you must obliterate the remembrance of Amalek from beneath heaven. You must exterminate every last Amalekite—man, woman, child, and even any animal that belonged to them—so that no one should be able to refer to such an animal as having formerly belonged to the Amalekites.

However, you need not wipe out any inanimate property that formerly belonged to the Amalekites, for it is possible to modify inanimate property such that it no longer evokes the memory of its previous owner. In contrast, since such changes cannot be made in animals without harming them, you must therefore (humanely) kill the Amalekites' animals.

You must not forget to do this. Because you are obligated to wipe out anything that would cause people to remember Amalek in any concrete way, you are allowed—and even obligated—to remember Amalek abstractly, in order to do this."¹⁶⁴

[19] Man, woman, child: The Jews were commanded to take revenge against the Midianites¹⁶⁵ as well, but in that case, they were not commanded to kill the young girls, and even the women were killed only because they were guilty of having corrupted the Israelites, or likely to do so. The difference, as stated, is that with regard to Amalek, the commandment is not only to take revenge against them but to annihilate any entity that could cause someone to think about them

(other than for the purpose of doing just that). 166 Nowadays, this commandment is no longer relevant literally, since, as pointed out above, 167 King Sennacherib of Assyria mingled all the nations together in the era of the First Temple (6th century BCE). It is therefore no longer possible to definitively determine who is an Amalekite; thus, all non-Jews are presumed to be one of the majority of gentiles, who are not descended from Amalek. 168
